I wish to have a gaming computer

Bernardino, 18
heart transplant

Bernardino has always been an active kid who loved to play soccer. He was healthy and was described as very athletic by those who knew him, so it came as a shock to his family when he suddenly had trouble breathing after activity. His family became extremely worried when the doctor didn't know what was going on with Bernardino, but after an Xray on his chest and an echocardiogram, Bernardino was diagnosed with an abnormality in his heart. He had to be transported to a Stanford medical center where he remained for nine months to eventually have heart transplant surgery.

This setback doesn't stop Bernardino from enjoying one of the sports he loves the most, soccer. He is quite the avid FIFA player, and also enjoys watching soccer on television.

With his athletic activity now on hold, Bernardino wishes for a gaming computer so that he can play FIFA and lead his own soccer team in the interactive game, Football Manager. Bernardino would love to be a test pilot one day, so with his new gaming computer, he can play a flight simulator and practice and fly from the comfort of his own home. Whether Bernardino is playing video games, watching his favorite TV shows, doing schoolwork, or practicing for his future career, a gaming computer will fulfill every one of his needs.
